Hi Felicity,

Is it my imagination or have you caught up on scheduling?

[I haven't quite caught up. The July issue came out in August. If I do two issues per month I still won't quite have the October issue out in time for VCON.]

This has pictures of the usual suspects. Since the debate over Platonism hasn't been settled in math I doubt that this will be freely accepted either.

<https://plus.maths.org/content/omega-and-why-maths-has-no-toes>

Chaitin on TOEs.¹

[That was interesting and I enjoyed it, although he lost me when he said "An example will make this clearer" and then got into equations. Fortunately the article was "intended as popular science" and still mostly comprehensible.]

Sometimes the advantage of getting old improves the humour of situations.

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=qEC-EofeNZs2>

I heard the mission commander's name as Hairy Rodent but it was actually Perry Rhodan.

[Perry Rhodan novels frequently appear at VCON's Turkey Readings. I could watch a little of this movie so I have a reference for Rhodan the next time I draw him. Neat theme song!]

I just saw Pandorum.³ The eye candy level was pretty good. Towards the end it fell apart by making one suspend far too much belief. Worth a look though. Part two would represent a nice set of problems so the ending was Now what?? of the first water.

If you are not squeamish, try *Azumi 1*⁴ on YouTube. The best one liner in it is "She's here!!" If you're not used to samurai movies it'll seem pretty bad but is relatively low level in violence.

So who wants to volunteer to help Bertrand with his homework? Looks like his plate is full right now.

1 Theory of Everything.

2 Mission Stardust (1967), AKA 4...3...2...1...Morte, AKA Perry Rhodan—SOS aus dem Weltall ("SOS from Space").

3 (2009).

4 (2003).

I was amazed by the birthdays listing at so many notables on the list. I was also bemused to think someone would name a child Crotch Thunder on purpose. Maybe it was a name change through the courts later?

As you may have guessed, I'm a fan of documentary journalism by Adam Curtis and John Pilger. Like anyone else their world viewpoint is biased but turning over rocks neglected by the so-called mainstream finds some good stuff.

[I'm glad you made me aware of Adam Curtis. I've now watched his two short films about "oh-dear-ism" and am planning to watch longer things like The Great British Housing Disaster (1984), Pandora's Box (1992), and The Century of the Self (2002).]

The difference between Crazy Rulers of the World and Hollywood's *Men Who Stare at Goats*⁵ is quite revealing. The horrid bunglings detected at the highest levels of bureaucracies are most apparent when they start to exercise power for a coverup. PKD didn't explore that level of the mode but had a clear grasp of the effects on those lower on the scale.

One thing you see in the modern world is clear. There is no isolation where malevolence and corruption can be masked away with no consequences. Jane Austen could cover-up the tai-pans' opium peddling with a blithe phrase about a young man's income in pounds per annum, but those days are over. You bomb Libya and Syria and thousands of refugees flood into your happy unconcerned nest. I'm sure no decent person wants to see a bunch of women and children climbing through razor wire fences trying to find a better life. The answer is simple, be better to each other right where you are. It will by the sheer power of numbers make a big difference in the world.

[*Internet news team the Young Turks made a similar point yesterday.*⁶]

For those members of fandom who became overly serious about the Hugofuss: report immediately to Reverend Ivan Stang for conditioning by the Church of the SubGenius.

Both sides like to use random snippets quoted out of context and memetic tweetering to try for an emotional leg up on what they perceive as the other "side." Primates love to occasionally indulge in a shit flinging contest to alleviate their boredom. Then they retire claiming a win. Here's a news flash from Great Grandpa. Nobody won anything because it was a no win situation from inception to the dust settling.

On the good news side CJ and Jane had a good Shejicon and Sasquan. CJ is ½ finished with the next book. Good times with good friends is what fandom is really supposed to be about. Taral Wayne is more mobile, more upbeat about life and is having more fun these days. Lloyd Penney has a job (I consider that a fate worse than death but only retirees think that way). Steve Jackson has a Steampunk addition to Munchkin and a Car Wars card game now. One Piece has a one hour episode on Sabo online at animefreaktv.com.⁷

Like Max Stirner said the world is a wonderful place once you realize how to get your own slice of the pie.

Warm regards,

Dave

Dear BCSFans:

Got BCSFazine 505 here, and I am ready to make a few comments on what I see here. It's a Friday, my thoughts are elsewhere, so wish me luck, and let's see what happens.

Reality is relative. Your reality might resemble mine, but will never match. That's why trying to convince others of your viewpoint can be so futile. I do have the Hugofuss in mind. Now that the rockets have (or haven't) been handed out, are the Puppies actually thinking of suing the Worldcon for the rockets they so definitely believe are theirs?

Current information for Irshad Manji...“Irshad Manji is a Canadian author, educator at New York University, and advocate of a ‘reformist’ interpretation of Islam. Manji is the founder and director of the Moral Courage Project at the Robert F. Wagner Graduate School of Public Service at New York University, a course offering that aims to teach young leaders ‘to make values-driven decisions for the sake of their integrity—professional and personal.’ ” She may not be on television any more, but she is certainly out in the media, getting her good message across.

This Friday is nearly at an end, which means the weekend is just a short time away. Hope yours is a fine time, and see you all with 506.

Yours,

Lloyd Penney

Dear BCSFen:

Thanks for the newest issue of BCSFazine, № 506. Catching up eventually, and I hope this one is on time.

The local...we recently had to deal with about a thousand dollars of repairs on the car. I shouldn't complain about it because we've had the car for a few years now, and this is the first major repair.

I am writing this on the first day of school of the year for many kids, and I am finding out how many friends are going back to school, I think more out of being unable to find work, rather than wanting to further their education. Fake degrees? I have found that they seem to come from fake universities, or online universities with little or no standing, so that such a degree becomes meaningless.

Fandom's had lots of internal feuds and fights, but most of what we've heard of have been in fannish history books, like lit/media, Topic A, etc., but the Puppies' Mess is probably the first feud we've seen live and in person, and publicized through social media.

So many familiar faces and names passing away. After Yvonne Craig, we now mourn Martin Milner and Judy Carne. I feel so old...

I am going to wrap this, for I am not into philosophy, or most of the other topics being discussed elsewhere. Take care, all, and see you with the next issue.

Yours,
Lloyd Penney

Yet another varied and interesting little fanzine from you busy Vancouverites arrived a few weeks back, so now it's time to take a break and write a brief letter of comment on what's inside.

I love Brad Foster's artistic style. That cover drawing is delightful and so describes how I sometimes feel about life on this rock spinning in space. Yes, reality can be strange, much stranger than our imaginations. This cat—at least it appears to be of feline structure—certainly has that wide-eyed, amazed look in its eyes. Me, befuddled would be the expression on my face.

[I love his art style too. I like the idea that it was a cat. Sometimes cats do look thoughtful.]

I had no idea there was such a thing as Zappology until I read your response to Dave Haren on page 1. Can I get a degree in that? And since I'm in Dave's letter, I like that quote from John Rawls. Even though I disagree with his opening clause. I believe a person can know his or her place in society, and can achieve that place—or any place—if a person is so inclined. It takes persistence and faith in self. Yes, many people do indeed live behind a “veil of ignorance,” but only because they have chosen so. One can find their abilities if they are willing to search for them. Then again, we all know that the real answer to everything is 42. Now where did I put my blanket? It's around here somewhere...

Dave Haren really does write interesting letters, and lots of them these days. If he would hie thinself over to efanazines.com my fanzine Askance awaits his perusal, and I would most certainly enjoy his comments. Also, if I could get his mailing address I could send him my paper-only fanzine Askew, the 13th issue of which is ready for proofreading, printing, and mailing next weekend. You will naturally be getting a copy, too, Felicity. And Lloyd Penney, also Taral Wayne, R. Graeme Cameron, Murray Moore, Garth Spencer...Wow! My Canadian readership is growing. Good sign, that.

What the heck is that on the bottom of page 7? It looks like some kind of armored Lego-Bot. It sure looks weird.

[It's a different angle of the 3D printed tank robot from page 1. It reminds me of the Technodrome (right) if the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles captured it and rebuilt it in a turtle theme, as they did with Baxter Stockman's van (above).]

Hey, I think that will do it. The fanzine reviews on the last two pages reminds me that I have some loc-writing to do in order to catch up on things. So thank you once again for the fanzine, and I hope life treats you well.

All the best,
John Purcell

News-Like Matter

Notes from July 2015 BCSFA Meeting

In attendance were Barb Dryer (secretary), Kathleen Moore (treasurer), Ray Seredin (host), Felicity Walker (editor), Michael “Fruvous” Bertrand, Julian Castle, Joe Devoy, William Graham, Stewart Smyth, and Sid Trim.

Ray saw a Bojack Horseman necktie at Norwescon. This led to discussion of animation, censorship, advertising, racism, violence, and pro-sociality.

I thought I smelled typewriter ribbon. This reminded Sid of videos with kids reacting to antique things, such as typewriters. Fruvous wondered if these things were also antiques to Generation X. I said that typewriters were still common throughout my childhood, although they were electric. When I visited my grandparents I borrowed my grandfather’s old manual Remington. I received an electric Smith-Corona as a gift when I was about 12. In grade nine I took a typing course and our teacher, whom I will call “Mrs. Bag,” complained bitterly about the students getting away with using electric typewriters when it was all manual in her day.

Stew remembered candy cigarettes. I vaguely remembered them too. You had to go to the Chinese mom & pop convenience store to get them. For William, that was the closest store to where he lived, but for Fruvous, it was on the other side of town. He went there to get Black Bart licorice gum. My notes say “And the old Coke with real cocaine!” (What does that mean?)

Stew knew someone one year younger than him who only had one TV channel growing up, and still hadn't seen any Wayne & Shuster. Ray said that they kept making Wayne & Shuster up to 1989. I was surprised and didn't remember seeing any 1980s Wayne & Shuster. Joe and Fruvous said that we might have seen it and not known it because it looked exactly the same as 1960s Wayne & Shuster and used the same jokes.

This reminded Sid that NASA taped over the Moon landings—but recently found some lunar orbit footage, which is being restored by a private group. Ray said that the CBC junked its telecine machine because they couldn't replace a part. Joe said that this is the CBC cut by Stephen Harper until they have to fill airtime with old footage. I said that it's nice to see archival footage but not when modern TV personalities try to add their own spam onto it. Joe said that similarly, Michael Enright adds bitchy comments to the audio on CBC's Rewind.⁹

My notes say that Ray said “[Something] Kent, Washington, [something] 2019, [something] guppy.”

There was a fire in the neighbourhood! Kathleen arrived later because she was concerned that it was in the apartment building where friends lived, but it turned out to be the laundromat at 8th Street and 4th Avenue.

Tonight Stew was dressed like Ricky Gervais.

My notes say “‘How's the Night Life in Cissalda?’ by Harlan Ellison typewriter.” I didn't remember the title but someone described the premise and I realized I'd read it in the UBC SFS's library.

Mini-Reviews

Julian Castle

Mini-Review of 'Extant' (TV Series)

A mostly enjoyable sci-fi series, starring Halle Berry, with two main sci-fi elements:

(1) Androids (called humanichs), and

(2) Spores in outer-space resulting in human/alien hybrids. Set in a future where door peepholes are apparently no longer in use (or perhaps an alternate history where peepholes were never invented).

(To be fair: I haven't watched the first season of the show, but I've watched most of the second season and I don't remember seeing any peepholes.)

Mini-Review of 'Helix' (TV Series)

Sci-fi horror series where:

(a) Scientists are infected by selective stupidity, and

(b) The plot suffers from very bad writing. Writing so bad I gave up after the fourth episode.
